

Citation: BC v Canada Employment Insurance Commission, 2023 SST 839

Social Security Tribunal of Canada Appeal Division

Leave to Appeal Decision

Applicant:	B. C.
Representative:	E. H.
Respondent:	Canada Employment Insurance Commission

---

Decision under appeal:	General Division decision dated April 6, 2023 (GE-22-2665)
-------------------------------	---

---

Tribunal member:	Pierre Lafontaine
Decision date:	June 23, 2023
File number:	AD-23-420

Decision

[1] Leave to appeal is refused. This means the appeal will not proceed.

Overview

[2] The Applicant (Claimant) lost her job because she did not comply with the employer's COVID-19 vaccination policy (Policy). She was not granted an exemption. The Claimant then applied for Employment Insurance (EI) regular benefits.

[3] The Respondent (Commission) determined that the Claimant lost her job because of misconduct, so it was not able to pay her benefits. The Claimant appealed the reconsideration decision to the General Division.

[4] The General Division found that the Claimant lost her job following her refusal to follow the employer's Policy. It found that the Claimant knew that the employer was likely to dismiss her in these circumstances. The General Division concluded that the Claimant lost her job because of misconduct.

[5] The Claimant seeks leave to appeal of the General Division's decision to the Appeal Division. The Claimant submits that the Policy was unlawful, coercive, unfair, unjust, and immoral. She did nothing wrong because her actions are a direct consequence of the employer's new Policy. She submits that a finding of misconduct in this case would suggest that all employers can implement policies that are coercive and threatening to the safety and security of employees without consequence. The Claimant submits that "misconduct" which is not defined cannot possibly include refusing to comply with employers policies or governmental directives that infringe one's rights under God's given rights and common law. She submits that refusing a dangerous medical intervention cannot be interpreted as "misconduct" justifying depriving a citizen of government assistance or service.

[6] I must decide whether the Claimant has raised some reviewable error of the General Division upon which the appeal might succeed.

[7] I refuse leave to appeal because the Claimant's appeal has no reasonable chance of success.

Issue

[8] Does the Claimant raise some reviewable error of the General Division upon which the appeal might succeed?

Analysis

[9] Section 58(1) of the Department of Employment and Social Development Act specifies the only grounds of appeal of a General Division decision. These reviewable errors are that:

1. The General Division hearing process was not fair in some way.
2. The General Division did not decide an issue that it should have decided. Or, it decided something it did not have the power to decide.
3. The General Division based its decision on an important error of fact.
4. The General Division made an error of law when making its decision.

[10] An application for leave to appeal is a preliminary step to a hearing on the merits. It is an initial hurdle for the Claimant to meet, but it is lower than the one that must be met on the hearing of the appeal on the merits. At the leave to appeal stage, the Claimant does not have to prove her case but must establish that the appeal has a reasonable chance of success based on a reviewable error. In other words, that there is arguably some reviewable error upon which the appeal might succeed.

[11] Therefore, before I can grant leave to appeal, I need to be satisfied that the reasons for appeal fall within any of the above-mentioned grounds of appeal and that at least one of the reasons has a reasonable chance of success.

Does the Claimant raise some reviewable error of the General Division upon which the appeal might succeed?

[12] The Claimant submits that the Policy was unlawful, coercive, unfair, unjust, and immoral. She did nothing wrong because her actions are a direct consequence of the employer's new Policy. She submits that a finding of misconduct in this case would suggest that all employers can implement policies that are coercive and threatening to the safety and security of employees without consequence. The Claimant submits that "misconduct " which is not defined cannot possibly include refusing to comply with employer policies or governmental directives that infringe one's rights under God's given rights and common law. She submits that refusing a dangerous medical intervention cannot be interpreted as " misconduct" justifying depriving a citizen of government assistance or service.

[13] The General Division had to decide whether the Claimant lost her job because of misconduct.

[14] The notion of misconduct does not imply that it is necessary that the breach of conduct be the result of wrongful intent; it is sufficient that the misconduct be conscious, deliberate, or intentional. In other words, in order to constitute misconduct, the act complained of must have been wilful or at least of such a careless or negligent nature that one could say the employee wilfully disregarded the effects their actions would have on their performance.

[15] The General Division's role is not to judge the severity of the employer's penalty or to determine whether the employer was guilty of misconduct by dismissing the Claimant in such a way that her dismissal was unjustified, but rather of deciding whether the Claimant was guilty of misconduct and whether this misconduct led to her dismissal.<sup>1</sup>

[16] Based on the evidence, the General Division determined that the Claimant lost her job because she refused to follow the Policy. She had been informed of the employer's Policy and was given time to comply. She was not granted a religious exemption. The Claimant refused intentionally; this refusal was wilful. This was the direct cause of her dismissal. The General Division found that the Claimant knew that her refusal to comply with the Policy could lead to her dismissal.

---

<sup>1</sup> Canada (Attorney general) v Marion, 2002 FCA 185; Fleming v Canada (Attorney General), 2006 FCA 16.

[17] The General Division concluded from the preponderant evidence that the Claimant's behavior constituted misconduct.

[18] It is well-established that a deliberate violation of the employer's policy is considered misconduct within the meaning of the Employment Insurance Act (EI Act).<sup>2</sup> It is also considered misconduct within the meaning of the EI Act not to observe a policy duly approved by a government or an industry.<sup>3</sup>

[19] It is not really in dispute that an employer has an obligation to take all reasonable precautions to protect the health and safety of its employees in their workplace. In the present case, the employer followed the directive of the Ontario Chief Medical Officer of Health to implement its Policy to protect the health of all employees during the pandemic. The Policy was in effect when the Claimant was dismissed.<sup>4</sup>

[20] The Claimant submits that the General Division failed to evaluate the effectiveness and reasonableness of the employer's Policy.

[21] This Tribunal does not have the jurisdiction to decide whether the employer's health and safety measures regarding COVID-19 were efficient or reasonable. In other words, the Tribunal does not have jurisdiction to decide whether the employer's vaccination Policy threatened the safety and security of employees.

[22] The question of whether the employer should have accommodated the Claimant by accepting her request for an exemption based on her religious beliefs, or whether the employer violated her collective agreement, or whether the Policy violated her human and constitutional rights, is a matter for another forum. This Tribunal is not the

---

<sup>2</sup> Canada (Attorney General) v Bellavance, 2005 FCA 87; Canada (Attorney General) v Gagnon, 2002 FCA 460.

<sup>3</sup> CUB 71744, CUB 74884.

<sup>4</sup> Directive no 6 issued under section 77.7 of the Health Protection and Promotion Act.

appropriate forum through which the Claimant can obtain the remedy that she is seeking.<sup>5</sup>

[23] The Federal Court has rendered a recent decision in Cecchetto regarding misconduct and a claimant's refusal to follow the employer's COVID-19 vaccination policy. The Claimant submitted that refusing to abide by a vaccine policy unilaterally imposed by an employer is not misconduct. He put forward that it was not proven that the vaccine was safe and efficient. The Claimant felt discriminated against because of his personal medical choice. The Claimant submitted that he has the right to control his own bodily integrity and that his rights were violated under Canadian and international law.<sup>6</sup>

[24] The Federal Court confirmed the Appeal Division's decision that, by law, this Tribunal is not permitted to address these questions. The Court agreed that by making a personal and deliberate choice not to follow the employer's vaccination policy, the claimant had breached his duties owed to his employer and had lost his job because of misconduct under the EI Act.<sup>7</sup> The Court stated that there exist other ways in which the claimant's claims can properly advance under the legal system.

[25] In the previous Paradis case, the claimant was refused EI benefits because of misconduct. He argued that the employer's policy violated his rights under the Alberta Human Rights Act. The Federal Court found it was a matter for another forum.

[26] The Federal Court stated that there are available remedies for a claimant to sanction the behaviour of an employer other than transferring the costs of that behaviour to the Employment Insurance Program.

---

<sup>5</sup> In Paradis v Canada (Attorney General), 2016 FC 1282, the Claimant argued that the employer's policy violated his rights under the Alberta Human Rights Act. The Court found it was a matter for another forum; See also Mishibinijima v. Canada (Attorney General), 2007 FCA 36, stating that the employer's duty to accommodate is irrelevant in deciding misconduct cases.

<sup>6</sup> Cecchetto v Canada (Attorney general), 2023 FC 102.

<sup>7</sup> The Court refers to Bellavance, see above note 2.

[27] In the Mishibinijima case, the Federal Court of Appeal stated that the employer's duty to accommodate is irrelevant in deciding EI misconduct cases.

[28] As stated previously, the General Division's role is not to determine whether the employer was guilty of misconduct by dismissing the Claimant in such a way that her dismissal was unjustified, but rather of deciding whether the Claimant was guilty of misconduct and whether this misconduct led to her dismissal.

[29] The preponderant evidence before the General Division shows that the Claimant made a personal and deliberate choice not to follow the employer's Policy in response to the exceptional circumstances created by the pandemic and this resulted in her being dismissed.

[30] Before the General Division, the Claimant submitted a tribunal decision like her case where the applicant was successful in receiving EI benefits.<sup>8</sup> It is important to reiterate that the General Division decision is not binding on the Appeal Division.<sup>9</sup> Those of the Federal Court are binding and have been followed by the Appeal Division. Furthermore, the General Division decision referred to was rendered prior to the Federal Court decision in Cecchetto.

[31] The General Division could not focus on the employment law relationship, the conduct of the employer, and the penalty imposed by the employer. It had to focus on the conduct of the claimant.

[32] I see no reviewable error made by the General Division when it decided the issue of misconduct solely within the parameters set out by the Federal Court of Appeal, which has defined misconduct under the EI Act.<sup>10</sup>

---

<sup>8</sup> AL v Canada Employment Insurance Commission, 2022 SST 1428.

<sup>9</sup> I note that the Commission was granted leave to appeal of the General Division decision to the Appeal Division (AD-23-13).

<sup>10</sup> Paradis v Canada (Attorney General); 2016 FC 1282; Canada (Attorney General) v McNamara, 2007 FCA 107; CUB 73739A, CUB 58491; CUB 49373.

[33] I am fully aware that the Claimant may seek relief before another forum, if a violation is established.<sup>11</sup> This does not change the fact that under the EI Act, the Commission has proven on a balance of probabilities that the Claimant was dismissed because of misconduct.

[34] After reviewing the docket of appeal, the decision of the General Division and considering the arguments of the Claimant in support of her request for leave to appeal, I find that the appeal has no reasonable chance of success.

Conclusion

[35] Leave to appeal is refused. This means the appeal will not proceed.

Pierre Lafontaine
Member, Appeal Division

---

<sup>11</sup> I note that in a recent decision, the Superior Court of Quebec has ruled that provisions that imposed the vaccination, although they infringed the liberty and security of the person, did not violate section 7 of the Canadian Charter of Rights. Even if section 7 of the Charter were to be found to have been violated, this violation would be justified as being a reasonable limit under section 1 of the Charter - Syndicat des métallos, section locale 2008 c Procureur général du Canada, 2022 QCCS 2455 (Only in French at the time of publishing).